

Exporting to the USA

Overview

With a consumer market of over $20 trillion and a population of 325 million the USA is an attractive export market. Over 25% of global household consumption is in the USA which drives product and service innovation supported by a skilled workforce and open market.

Despite its attractiveness, the USA is a complex place to do business. It is a federal system so you need to understand how each State operates to determine opportunities and challenges for developing your business across the country.

Be prepared

Research, preparation and planning are key for any exporters but particularly so for smaller businesses and those embarking on an export journey for the first time. However, the U.S. collects a lot of data much of which is available online so take your time to investigate which State would be most appropriate for your product or service and what you need to do to access the market. Some of the steps to take are:

1. Access the opportunities:
 - Find the consumption/import figures of products similar to your own and the economic growth rate of a potential State
 - Look up the demographics and your potential competition
 - Assess the data and trends that are important for your success
2. Have a plan. Your export plan should confirm you

- have the people, capacity and knowledge to enter the highly competitive U.S. market.
3. Choose a route to market. Whether you sell directly, use a distributor or agent, or embark on a joint venture, you must ensure clarity of responsibility for things like delivery and payment, and always remember to protect your intellectual
 4. Find the opportunities. Meet buyers and generate new business.
 5. Understand your obligations. Get registered and insured. Know what is required from you legally and financially to avoid litigation especially if you are employing people in the country.
 6. Get the finance in place to make sure you can enter the market successfully, get paid and repatriate your profits.
